THE REWARDS OF FAITHFULNESS

Luke 10:1-11

Success and failure frequently are two sides of the same coin. Jesus knew this from personal experience. In spite of the fact that he was a superb teacher and had unusual success, he also had his failures. Some people misunderstood his teachings. Others followed him for the wrong reasons. One of his closest followers betrayed him and another when under pressure denied that he ever knew him. His critics thought he wasted too much time with children and with people who were considered worthless and untouchable.

Thus when he sent some of this followers ahead of him to visit towns and villages so that his ministry would spread, he told them that they too would have both success and failure. He said, according to Luke's account, "The harvest is plentiful and the laborers are few; I am sending you out as lambs in the midst of wolves....When the people welcome you, tell them that God's love is in the world and in their midst. And when you are rejected, when you fail, move on."

It's good advice, not only in our telling people about God and God's love, but in every aspect of our life together. No one is successful one-hundred percent of the time. No one bats 1000. But if you are faithful in what you are called to do, your faithfulness will be rewarded. Success will come and in places you hadn't expected.

This advice which he gave to his followers as he sent them out two by two reminds me of his parable of the sower which has the same theme. He said, and I'm paraphrasing, "I have come to sow God's love among you. I have brought the seed and it is good seed. You, my followers, are also to be sowers of this good seed. It is your job to scatter this seed as broadly as possible. But also remember that some of the seed you sow will go to waste. Some will fall on the path and is walked on, or the birds eat it. Some will fall in the rocks and it will not take root because there is no depth of soil. Some will fall among the weeds and be choked out. But if you sow faithfully, some seed will fall into good soil and it will yield a hundredfold. And you the sowers cannot always tell the good soil from the bad."

You can make the mistake of trying to over-analyze the soil before you sow any seed, or over-analyzing a situation instead of taking appropriate action. A man fell into a pit and couldn't get himself out. A subjective person came along and said, "It's logical that someone would fall down there." A self-righteous person said, "Only bad people fall into a pit." A mathematician calculated how he fell into the pit. A news reporter wanted an exclusive story on his pit. A fundamentalist said, "You deserve your pit." A self-pitying person said, "You haven't seen anything until you've seen my pit." An optimist said, "Things cold be worse." A pessimist said, "Things will get worse." Jesus, seeing the man, took him by the hand and lifted him out of the pit."

Everyday life is filled with success and failure, but the success outweighs the failure if you are faithful in doing what you are called to do.

This truth is illustrated in so many ways in everyday life. Take baseball as an example. Baseball players who hit the most home runs also have the most strikeouts. Babe Ruth struck out 1330 times, a record in futility not equaled by any other player in baseball history. But that isn't what we remember about him. His 714 home runs obliterated the 1330 strikeouts.

Cy Young, one of baseball's greatest pitchers had 511 victories. What is generally forgotten is that he lost almost as many games as he won.

Honus Wagner is generally conceded to be one of the best baseball players of all time. For years he was the mainstay of the Pittsburgh Pirates. He was the idol of fans and players alike. One year he was voted the most valuable player in the league. He also led the league in errors. The reason, he went after every ball that came into his territory. People who have no mistakes, errors or failures in life are very apt to be those who have few successes.

In my first parish in the 1950's on the south side of Chicago, one of the church members was a successful Fuller Brush sales person. Those were the days when sales people would go house to house every day. I asked him one day what was the secret of his success? He said, "It's no secret.

I have to keep knocking on doors. If I make 100 calls per day, it's almost guaranteed that I am going to make a good living. But if I stop after the first 10 calls in the morning because I haven't made a sale, I would never succeed. It's impossible to predict in advance which of the homes are going to result in good sales. I'm constantly surprised."

There are activities in life where our successes and failures cannot be measured as easily or statistically as in baseball or other sports or sales. I know that's true of the sermons I preach.

It's hard to tell sometimes whether a sermon is a home run or a strike out or an error.

There are even times when I wonder if all the time I spend in preparing sermons has any effect on anyone. I'm sure that some of you have the same questions.

I know that's true because I remember reading a letter to the editor of a church newspaper in which the writer of the letter said: "It seems that ministers feel their sermons are very important and spend a great deal of time preparing them. I've been attending church quite regularly for the past thirty years and I have probably heard three thousand of them. To my consternation, I discovered that I cannot remember a single sermon that I've heard.

I wonder if a minister's time might be more profitably spent on something else?"

Several weeks went by and then another letter appeared in the same church newspaper which gave me some hope. The writer said: "I have been married for more than thirty years. During that time I have eaten 32,850 meals, many of them prepared by my wife. Suddenly I have discovered that I cannot remember the exact menu of any one of them. But I have the feeling that without them, I would have starved to death long ago."

Life is like that. Unlike baseball, in many of your endeavors, you do not always know when you've hit a home run or a single or double or triple, or if you've struck out. But as Jesus pointed out, if you live faithfully by extending a hand to others, your faithfulness will be rewarded.

Listen to this letter to Ann Landers. "Mark was walking home from school when he noticed the boy ahead of him had tripped and dropped all of his books, along with two sweaters, a baseball bat, a glove and a tape recorder. Mark helped the boy pick up the scattered articles. Since they were going in the same direction, Mark helped carry the burden. He learned the boy's name was Bill, that he liked video games, baseball and history, that he was having a lot of trouble in school and that he had just broken up with his girlfriend. When they arrived at Bill's home, Mark was invited in for a soda and to watch television. The afternoon passed pleasantly with a few laughs and some small talk."

"The boys continued to see each other around school and had lunch together several times. They ended up at the same high school, where they had brief contacts over the years. Finally, the long awaited senior year came, and three weeks before graduation, Bill asked Mark if they could talk."

"Bill reminded him of the day years before when they had first met. 'Did you ever wonder why I was carrying so much stuff home from school that day?' he asked. 'I cleaned out my locker because I didn't want to leave a mess for anyone else. I had saved up a couple of dozen of my mother's sleeping pills and was going to commit suicide. But after we had such a good time together, I realized that if I killed myself, I would have missed all that fun and so many other good times that might follow. You see, Mark, when you picked up my books that day, you did a lot more. You saved my life.'"

Faithfulness is rewarded in so many ways, not all of them quite that dramatic. A small congregation in a rural area prided itself on being a training ground for seminary students ministering in their first pastorate. While interviewing pastoral candidates, a member of the search committee mentioned the former pastors who had gone on to serve in prominent capacities–one as president of a seminary and pastor of a large city church, another also as a seminary president and a third as presiding officer of two denominational conventions. "How in the world did you find that many potentially great persons in this little church?" the astonished candidate asked. "Find them," said the committee member. "We didn't find them. We made them."

When I was working as a part-time student minister in Connecticut while attending seminary, one of my assignments one summer was to visit a woman of the parish who was in the hospital because of a series of brain tumors. She had survived several operations and was trying now to recover from another one. There was little hope, if any that she would recover. I visited her week after week and month after month, always trying to be sensitive to her needs and having a brief prayer with her. She did not often visibly respond or talk very much. At the end of the summer she died. I was discouraged, not because she died, but because in all of my visits she had not been very responsive and didn't seem to care whether I visited her or not. A few months after that I moved away. The next Christmas, I received a letter from her husband in which he told me how much my many visits to his wife had meant to her, how it had prepared her for her death and how it has helped him. I had counted my efforts a failure, but it was not so. Faithfulness has its rewards.

When Jesus sent his followers out to tell people the good news of God's love, in addition to reminding them that they would experience failure and success but overall they would be rewarded for their faithfulness, he gave them another very important piece of advice–travel lightly, don't carry too much baggage with you on your life's journey.

There was a man named Richard, who was leading a group of 12 mid-life adventurers on a safari in East Africa. At the end of their first day's walk, they came to their evening destination, a native village. They would camp there that night before continuing their backpacking hike in the morning.

Their guide the next day was to be the chief of the village. He was able to speak English fluently because of having been educated at a missionary school. The next day, with the village chief as their guide, they continued their journey. As they walked along, the village chief kept glancing at Richard's over-stuffed backpack. It was one of those high-tech ultra light models designed for maximum cargo carrying efficiency. That evening as the group was setting up camp for the night, Richard offered to show the village chief his backpack and what he had in it.

With pride he opened it and showed the chief what he had in all of his many compartments, eating utensils, cutting devices, direction finders, clothing, medical supplies and more. He was over-loaded. When it was all spread out, Richard looked at the village chief for his reaction. The chief was amused but silent. Finally after several minutes of surveying everything, he turned and asked Richard, “Do all of these things make you happy?”

Richard was stunned. There was something powerful about the question. He couldn't answer that evening and for weeks afterward he thought about it. He not only thought about what he was carrying on the trip, but also what he was carrying through his entire life. He discovered that in the process he was clarifying the core values of his life.

Some of the things he was carrying did add to his happiness, but many of them didn't, at least not in any way that made sense to be dragging them along. That night, he unpacked his backpack and gave many of the items he was carrying to people in the village. More importantly, during the coming weeks and months, he unpacked and re-packed his life.

He learned to travel with a much lighter load.

That's what Jesus was advising his followers to do. Travel as lightly as possible. Too many people are carrying things on their life's journey that are weighing them down, things they don't need, some of these are material things, and others are mental, patterns of behavior that are no longer useful, long established habits which are not adding anything important to their lives, grudges and resentments that are a heavy load and need to be unpacked and left behind.

It takes courage to look at what you're carrying and even more courage to consider traveling more lightly.

This Bible story then is about two issues–the first is, each one of our lives will have successes and failures. It takes courage to keep going but if you're faithful in what you are called to do it is God's promise that the successes will outweigh the failures. The second issue–as you go about doing what you are called to do, learn to travel lightly. It will make the journey through life easier and more fun. Amen.
